This manuscript is dealing with all aspects of heart failure, in a way typical for monograph literature. Throughout the detailed literature review, the newest knowledge about etiology, pathogenesis, diagnostics and therapy of heart failure is summarized. The therapy of heart failure was given special attention, and the results of other authors are compared with own reports. The author has presented his results clearly and systematically, contributing significantly to a reader's comprehension.

From the technical point of view, the manuscript is well prepared, and illustrated with numerous figures, tables and graphs. There are several auto citations in the manuscript, which qualifies it to be classified as monograph. From the practical point of view, this book could be considered as significant contribution to domestic medical literature in the field of cardiology.

Due to evidence-based approach used by the author during creation of this book, there is special clinical value of the presented data: it will affect the prescribing behavior of physicians in routine clinical practice, improving rationality of heart failure management.
